

Dr Will Ince

Consultant oncologist

Dr Will Ince has a busy NHS practice where he looks after patients with urological (prostate and kidney), head and neck and skin cancers using the full breadth of non-surgical oncology treatments, with a particular interest in immunotherapy.

Dr Ince has a wide research portfolio and is a Principal Investigator for multiple national and international clinical trials. He publishes regularly and has presented research at national and international conferences. He chairs a National Cancer Research Institute (head and neck) working group defining strategic priorities for research and has co-authored national guidance in urological malignancies. He works closely with charities and patient advocacy groups and has co-authored leaflets for Prostate Cancer UK and Kidney Cancer UK.

Dr Ince trained in London, Cambridge and Norwich, winning both undergraduate and postgraduate prizes, including the prestigious Royal College Gold Medal for the highest mark in the fellowship examination. Prior to training as an oncologist, he was a GP for several years where he held managerial and educational responsibilities; he finds the ability to see things from the primary, secondary and tertiary care sectors invaluable to be able to offer his patients a holistic service.
